Unseen Passage

Green Valley School had a large empty space behind the playground. One day, the science teacher suggested turning it into a garden. The students were excited about the idea.

They planted seeds of flowers, vegetables, and herbs. Every day after school, a group of students watered the plants and removed weeds. Slowly, tiny green shoots appeared in the soil.

Within a few months, the garden was full of colorful flowers and fresh vegetables. The students learned how plants grow and why sunlight, water, and soil are important.

The vegetables grown in the garden were later used in the school kitchen to prepare healthy meals. The garden became the pride of the school.
